Overview

This webcast brings together three librarians from three very different institutions and backgrounds to explore how school librarians, public librarians, and academic librarians can collaborate to create comprehensive information literacy programs that span a user's lifetime. You will get the foundation for starting a local dialogue based on national principles.

Speakers:

Mary Evangeliste: Director of User Services & Outreach at Gettysburg College and co-founder of Fearless Future: Marketing & Design

Alex Hodges: Assistant Director of Library Instruction at American University in Washington

Niketha McKenzie: School Librarian at the Thurgood Marshall Academy

Roshin Mathew: Student at University of Maryland's iSchool and teacher of information literacy to older adults
