Program Description
Few understand the full degree of their operational dependence on computer systems or the extent to which IT plays a role in shaping their institution's strategic direction. Information Technology has led to substantial gains in productivity and innovation in U.S. business and industry, keeping our country in a leadership position in the international economy. What is the impact of IT on the multifaceted business of Higher Education? What is the recommended path forward for IT in higher education? The presentation will attempt to answer these questions.

Presenter
Stephen Hess is the Associate Vice President of Information Technology for the University of Utah, and the Chief Information Officer for the Utah System of Higher Education.
